Unhealthy diet—high in trans fats, sugar and processed and refined foods—increases risk for depression, especially in children and teens because it deprives the brain of the nutrients it needs, and breeds bad bacteria in the gut, which impacts our mental and physical health

Gut is the driver of health, including mental health, so keeping fiber intake high through the consumption of plant foods is very important. Research suggests a Mediterranean-style diet made up of fruits, vegetables, extra-virgin olive oil, yogurt and cheese, nuts, whole grains, seafood and lean red meat, and eliminate fried and processed foods. The diet provides the nutrition our brain needs and supports good bacteria in the gut.

KETO-FRIENDLY DIET

This high-fat, low-carbohydrate diet has been shown to help improve blood sugar control and may have other benefits for people with diabetes.

Keto diet are effective for weight loss, improving blood sugar control in people with diabetes, and reducing symptoms in some neurological conditions like epilepsy.

PLANT-BASED OPTION

A plant-based option refers to a food or meal that is made primarily or exclusively from plant-based ingredients, such as fruits, vegetables, legumes, grains, nuts, and seeds. These options are often rich in nutrients, fiber, and antioxidants, and can help reduce the risk of chronic diseases like heart disease, diabetes, and certain types of cancer.

LOW G.I. FOOD

A low GI diet is one that focuses on consuming foods that are low on the glycemic index, meaning that they are slowly digested and absorbed by the body, leading to a gradual and sustained rise in blood sugar levels. It helps to improved blood sugar control in people with diabetes, reduced risk of heart disease and stroke, and better weight management.
